Partner Coe W. Ramsey will participate in a panel discussing the legal aspects of the music business on February 7 at Deep South the Bar, a live music venue in Raleigh.

The talk is part of a monthly series titled "ANGLES: A Music Business Panel Discussion Series," hosted by Deep South Entertainment. The discussions feature music industry professionals tackling various issues involved in creating, producing and selling music. February's panel will address such issues as organization documents needed when starting a band, registering copyrighted material, licensing, trademarks and contracts for artists, managers, and songwriters.

Ramsey is an entertainment attorney with an emphasis in music, broadcast, communications and intellectual property law. A former DJ and producer, he regularly counsels musicians, producers, record companies, songwriters, authors, advertisers, and others in the entertainment industry on a wide variety of legal issues, including contracts, copyrights and trademarks, artist and management agreements, and intellectual property disputes. Ramsey teaches entertainment law as an adjunct professor at Wake Forest University School of Law.
