

Brooks Pierce Partner Named Legislative Chair of the North Carolina Bar Association Appellate Section

October 1, 2020

Subscribe to News and Insights

 Via RSS

 Via Email

Brooks Pierce partner Eric Fletcher has been named the Legislative Chair of the North Carolina Bar Association's (NCBA) Appellate Practice Section through 2021.

The section brings together association members who have a special interest in appellate practice, provides networking and educational opportunities and promotes excellence in North Carolina's appellate courts.

A former federal clerk and litigator at a large international law firm, Fletcher represents parties in all stages of appellate litigation in courts around the country. He has represented parties in the United States Courts of Appeals for the First, Sixth, Eighth, Ninth and Federal Circuit, the United States Supreme Court and multiple state courts of appeal. These appeals have included substantial issues of constitutional law, federal procedure, intellectual property law, criminal law, bankruptcy law and statutory interpretation.

To learn more about the NCBA's Appellate Practice Section, click here.