Noah Hock represents clients in entertainment, nonprofit, and media law matters. In addition to his legal practice, Noah is an active classical musician performing with the Winston-Salem Symphony and other regional orchestras. Noah uses his passion for music to represent musicians, artists, record producers, filmmakers, writers and publishers in a variety of arts-related matters. He also assists nonprofit organizations and media companies of all sizes with every aspect of their management and operation.

ENTERTAINMENT

Noah represents musicians, artists, record producers, DJs, writers, publishers, managers, film and television producers, and others in the entertainment industry in a wide variety of matters. These include contract drafting and negotiation, licensing, trademarks, copyright, and formation of entertainment companies.

CHARITIES AND NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS

Noah advises charities and other nonprofit organizations in a number of matters, including compliance with state and federal requirements, administrative filings, and everyday operations.

MEDIA AND COMMUNICATIONS

Noah represents broadcasting companies and radio and television stations on issues of FCC regulatory compliance and enforcement, licensing, transactions, copyright and other intellectual property matters, ownership, and many other areas.

ABOUT ME

Before beginning his legal career, Noah worked for over a decade as a professional classical musician, performing extensively with symphonies and chamber ensembles throughout the region. Indeed, Noah can still be seen as the Associate Principle Viola of the Winston-Salem Symphony and member of the Railyard String Quartet. Outside of the office and off the stage, Noah relishes life as a husband and father, and can often be found on a disc golf course or hiking one of Greensboro's many watershed trails.
