In an article published in North Carolina Lawyers Weekly commemorating Brooks Pierce's 125th anniversary, Managing Partner Reid Phillips said it's the firm's service to the community and clients that remain its enduring legacy.

"If you want a law firm that lasts for 125 years, you have to know your clients and stay ahead of their needs and you have to hire the best people with diverse talents," he said. "A strong culture that attracts the best and the brightest also leads to longevity."

Highlighted in the article are the firm's commitments to diversity, inclusion and community service, with attorneys serving on boards and committees, handling pro bono case work, and even volunteering with local children's sports leagues.

"I am excited about what our future holds and the impact current and upcoming generations of attorneys will have in shaping North Carolina and the practice of law," he said.
